To Whom it May Concern:

My client, Omega Bone, is a 49-year-old, female. Omega has experienced adverse work conditions, as a music teacher, for several years.

When client first started therapy at Rula Mental Health, in January 2025, her GAD7 score for anxiety was 18/21 and her PHQ9 score for depression was 21/27, both of which are extremely high. During the next few months in therapy she showed much improvement and her scores on March19, 2025 were: GAD7 (anxiety) 5/21 and PHQ9 (for depression) 6/27. After more trauma at work her scores began to rise again as shown here: April 28, 2025 GAD7 8/21 and PHQ9 13/27.

Omega reported, in January, the following from the intake note by therapist Eric Burnel LCSW: "The symptoms she was experiencing caused her to be depressed to the point that she did not engage individuals at work. Client feels like she is on edge and uneasy because she is extremely apprehensive when she is at work. In addition, she is not motivated to participate in activities that were fun for her at one time. For example, client shared that she previously would meditate, engage in self-care, or perform yoga. Now she often isolates herself and worries about how she is going to navigate at work to keep herself safe. Client's concerns are with her employment due to being, 'Repeatedly harassed by the administrators and peers.' In addition, the Client has taken legal action of filing a harassment suit against her employer."

On April 5, 2025, as a Licensed Clinical Psychotherapist, I diagnosed Omega with Post Traumatic Stress Disorder due to her symptoms of: Loss of appetite, difficulty falling and staying asleep, crying spells, fear, difficulty controlling the fear, suicidal ideation, lack of motivation (which she describes as, "Being catatonic"). Omega has experienced multiple traumatic events including, "Having the police called on me for no reason and being suspended without pay for five days for moving musical instruments into the auditorium." Omega experiences hypervigilance, low self-esteem, re-experiencing events, reckless behavior, self-blame, negative changes in mood and cognition, alterations in arousal, going out of her way to avoid events and people, feeling numb, detachment from people, activities and surroundings, distorted beliefs about self, and feelings of alienation. Omega's scores are: May 8, 2025 GAD7 (anxiety) 8 and PHQ9 (depression) 13.

This writer helped client create a safety plan due to client's inability, "To get out of bed all weekend." This writer also advised Omega, due to her extreme depressive symptoms, difficulty controlling depression, difficulty eating and sleeping, that she participates in weekly sessions with this writer to deal with her fear and reduce symptoms of depression and PTSD. This writer also advised Omega to take medical leave to relieve the stress of an adverse work environment.

Sincerely,

Carrie Poulson LCSW
